Factors to consider when using and choosing CBD product

Always keep these factors in mind, and follow these additional tips from holistic veterinarians, who have loads of experience using CBD for pets:

- Consult your veterinarian before you give your pet any treatments.
- Consider your dog's other health conditions that may affect his ability to react to or metabolize CBD, i.e., liver or kidney problems.
- Find a high-quality CBD oil that's free of any kinds of toxins. Since the industry isn't yet regulated, there are some potentially sketchy products out there. Ask for the product's certificate of analysis and analyse it carefully.

Can my pet overdose on CBD?

The short answer? No. Our product is non-psychoactive, whilst it is possible to give your pet more CBD than is beneficial, the most typical side effect he or she will experience is drowsiness. If you want CBD to work properly, don't overdo it.

How do I give my pet CBD Oil?

If your pet is willing, you can place drops directly into their mouths under their tongue (called sublingually in industry terms). But if your pet is resistant to this method, the easiest method is to apply drops to their food.
